Leopard print has as much of a chance of going out of style as a leopard does of changing its spots. Here's where the perennial trend is pouncing this fall.

By Sahar Khan

1 ROCK 'N' ROAR
Ulla Johnson's fall collection is inspired by '90s rave culture; for this grunge-glam coat, she stretched the negative space in the pattern and printed it on a faux-corduroy fabric for the ultimate "Party Like It's 1999" look. $1,795, modaoperandi.com

2 THE CAT'S PAJAMAS
Giambattista Valli's wide-legged pants are elegant enough for a prowl on the town but comfy enough to crash on the couch in afterward. The vintage housecoat-like silhouette of the topper also befits a stylish night in. Coat, $3,750; pants, $2,580; giambattistavalli.com

3 CLOAK AND DAGGER
Roberto Cavalli mixes posh with provocative, pairing a velvet-lined cape fit for a queen with a slinky bandeau-top dress featuring a hip-high slit. Coat, $7,200; dress, $2,415; robertocavalli.com

4 BLOOD SPORT
The stark white markings on this Proenza Schouler red-and-black leopard design signify snags, as if the color didn't soak through the folds, adding a modish twist to the evergreen print. $1,990, proenzaschouler.com

5 QUEEN OF THE JUNGLE
With this green-and-gold frock, Halpern, the go-to partywear brand of the moment, parses the leopard trend with a nod to '80s decadence, complete with retro-tastic ruching. Similar style $2,230; bergdorfgoodman.com
