Robe to Recovery

Ease into post-pandemic public life with these robe-inspired dresses, which are as rich in style and versatility as they are in comfort—and a cinch to pack, too

By Sahar Khan

Museum to Michelin-Starred Restaurant
Russian designer Ulyana Sergeenko elevates this housecoat-style dress with romantic details such as a gathered waist and kimono sleeves. Pair it with flats for a gallery stroll, then switch into more vertiginous footwear for dinner at the latest hot spot. $2,800, ulyanasergeenko.com

Botanical Garden to Concert
Luxe Italian sleepwear brand For Restless Sleepers steps into the daylight with this silk robe dress, which features foulard patchwork and a shawl collar. Smell the roses again, sans mask, at your local garden, then rock out at your favorite reopened music venue. $1,850, forrestlessleepers.com

Beach Club to Cocktail Bar
Designed by Kiev- and LA-based Alya Gonta of Lessless Robes, this chiffon frock's dressing gown-inspired silhouette evokes Faye Dunaway lounging by the Beverly Hills Hotel pool. Wear it loose over a maillot at the beach club, then tighten the silk satin belt for a spin at a speakeasy. $1,500, lesslessrobes.com

Farmers Market to Nightclub
This wrap dress from Farm encapsulates back-to-normal life's fashion ethos: Comfort is equal to style. The elastic waistline and detachable beaded belt ensure a freer fit, and the tropical print highlights the Brazilian brand's roots. While casual enough for the market, it's sufficiently fun and flirty for dancing the night away. $185, farmrio.com
